Cloudcroft resident Jennifer Gose has announced her candidacy for the November 2020 election for New Mexico House of Representatives District 54.

Gose was born in Lubbock, Texas and is proud to have grown up “downwind of the stock yards, in the middle of a cotton field, next to a pumpjack.”

As an entrepreneur in sales and marketing, she understands the importance of supporting businesses, while also creating jobs and new opportunities for residents in the district.

Her campaign will focus on being a voice for every resident living in the district, which covers parts of Otero, Chaves and Eddy Counties, and is one of the largest districts in the State.

She understands the uniqueness and the issues that many are facing with changes in the oil and gas industries, and the push for renewable energy and alternative sources.

While Gose is a Democrat, she vows to represent all walks of life and beliefs, knowing that when we work together we can be a stronger voice.

She has already begun talking to villages, cities, officials and people in the community who are receiving her with open arms as a fresh voice and someone who can advocate for them.

Gose believes that while there are national issues both Republicans and Democrats may disagree on, she wants to represent all New Mexicans in the district and separate from the narrative in Washington and simply get to work for the benefit of the people in her District, regardless of their political affiliation.

“No corporate PACs, no special interest, no dark money. Our campaign believes in representing the values of the people, and we plan on being fully transparent in our finances,” Gose said. “Southeastern New Mexico is a land full of opportunity, it deserves a representative who sees this and will fight for community economic investment, industry diversification, training and educational opportunity, and good jobs.”

Election day is November 3, 2020 and will include the Presidential and a number of other state and local elections.
